

Basel Hammuda's time as a doctor drove him into management for tech consultancy firm Capgemini. He is now keen to improve management in the healthcare sector

What inspired you to become a Chartered Manager?

We have a lot of well-qualified doctors in Egypt, but there are not enough qualified managers. While I was doing my MBA, I joined CMI and discovered I had the relevant experience to become Chartered.

How did you find the process?

Amazing! The process of preparing for the interview was challenging as I had never looked at my career in that way before – you have to look at the value you are adding to your employer, the people you are working with and the end client.

How has being Chartered helped you in your career?

It has shown my employer that I am interested in driving the company forward and bringing something new to the business. It is a real badge of honour. When I joined Capgemini, it definitely helped me stand out. Anyone can learn to become a manager and an effective leader. Chartered Manager helps you do that.

What would you say to someone thinking of becoming Chartered?

The Chartered Manager process taught me that professional development is an ongoing process; it is not just about completing a Master's or working in a big company – you have to continually challenge your skillset.
